The Few Awful Ones to Avoid

Unfortunately, not all videos live up to their promises. Here are a few types of videos you should avoid wasting your time on.

1. "Dull Presentations: The Sleep Inducers"

We've all been there – forced to endure a monotonous presentation that feels like a never-ending snooze fest. These videos lack engagement, creativity, and fail to capture your attention. Avoid these at all costs unless you're in dire need of a quick nap!

2. "Terrible Tutorials: The Confusion Creators"

Learning something new should be an exciting and enlightening experience. Unfortunately, some tutorial videos can be downright confusing, leaving you more puzzled than before you started. Stay away from these tutorials that fail to deliver clear instructions or helpful guidance.

3. "Boring Vlogs: The Yawn-Inducers"

Vlogs have become an immensely popular genre, but not all vlogs are created equal. Some vlogs lack personality, engaging storytelling, or interesting subject matter. Don't waste your time watching someone's dull daily routines or mundane conversations unless you have a strange fascination with watching paint dry!

4. "Horrendous Pranks: The Cringe Creators"

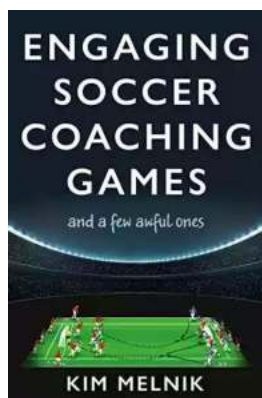

Prank videos can be entertaining when done right, but there's a fine line between harmless fun and flat-out cruelty. Avoid videos that involve humiliating or harming others, as they contribute to a toxic online culture. Opt for pranks that bring joy and laughter instead.

5. "Unwatchable Unboxings: The Disappointment Dealers"

Unboxing videos have gained popularity, but let's face it – not all unboxings are exciting or worth your time. Some unboxing videos lack enthusiasm, quality content, or insightful reviews. Save yourself the disappointment and only watch unboxing videos from reputable and trustworthy sources.

Videos have the power to transport us to new worlds, evoke emotions, and inspire us. Whether it's witnessing awe-inspiring natural wonders or indulging in heartwarming stories, there's always something to captivate our imaginations. Remember to choose your videos wisely, avoiding the dull and mediocre, so that you can truly enjoy the best online entertainment has to offer.

Why repeat endless drills when players are not in the army?

Why queue when all players can be actively involved throughout?

Why repeat when you can innovate?

Why only replicate the past when the sky's the limit?

Why tell players the answers when they can discover solutions for themselves?

Open players' minds by providing engaging games that put them in control. Each game within provides an interesting problem that challenges players to find personalised solutions that are embedded through immersion. Players become empowered to take responsibility for their learning through experimentation.

Common drills and practices direct players to use set solutions for contrived scenarios, reinforcing a closed mindset to problem solving. Instead the games within open players' minds to a range of possibilities by guiding them towards a wider range of tools. This allows players to identify which tools are more relevant to each situation, without limiting their use.

Each game uses a realistic situation to solve a particular problem, whilst making it difficult for players to 'cheat'. Players are subtly guided towards discovering the relevant skills and tactics. Games are diverse, engaging and have flexible conditions to suit a range of ability levels.

Over 250 games across a range of topics cater for coach specific challenges such as:

Building up play from the back,

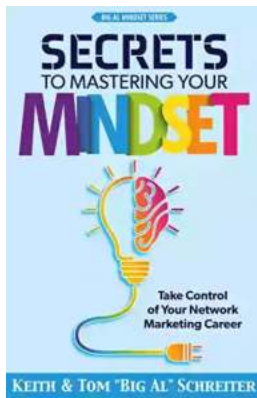

Making learning technical skills enjoyable,

Developing shape,

Preventing players from chasing and crowding the ball,

Developing fitness by maintaining session intensity.

This book also offers a few awful games and drills to compare with and to explain how common games are often counter-productive. Whilst many appear active and impressive, their hidden drawbacks are identified within.
