Set in Post-World War II England, this is a poignant and sometimes humorous study of a mother, daughter and grandmother relationship as they struggle with their individual circumstances and destinies.

Lizzie, a child, the protagonist, tells her story with immediacy and stark candor amid her oft-times chaotic life. She is the second illegitimate child born to Beth and fathered by an American Serviceman, who is mercilessly hunted down by Lizzie's grandmother, Mary. From the blitz bombing memories of the war, to the letter President Eisenhower personally signs, these females provide drama, excitement and tragedy that is impossible to ignore.

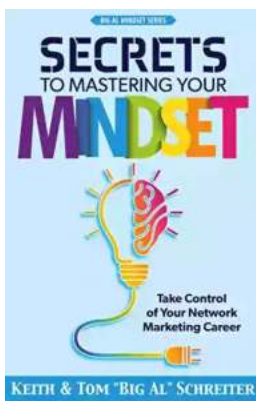

Lizzie's mother Beth is given a valuable opportunity to progress financially and personally; but will her previous heartbreak and current bitterness render her incapable of appreciating her new chance in life? Her miscalculated revenge only leads to temporary blessings and long term curses for the whole family.

Lizzie's largely female-influenced upbringing, offers a confusion of cognitive bias about men and she learns she has two invisible Fathers; one in unseen Heaven and the other in unknown America. Their powerful magnetic forces surround her. Her relationship with her brother, Steven, often colored by his own confused world of coping, is antagonist, competitive or dismissive.

Finally, the dichotomy of Lizzie's innocent and open acceptance of foreigners and her mother's distaste of other cultures, results in an ironic twist in Lizzie's fate.

This brings shocking consequences which deeply affect Lizzie's security and safety.
