When rival captains Norm Provan and Arthur Summons came together in a momentary embrace at the end of the 1963 Rugby League grand final, they could never have imagined the tradition they were building. They became the subject of one of sport's most enduring images, and ultimately the centrepiece of League's premiership trophy. Fifty years on, that moment is still celebrated as an iconic reflection of the game and its people. It is also a symbol of the changing face of sport, and of the role that sport has played in the Australian way of life. Provan is perhaps the most successful player of all time, having played in 10 grand finals and won the lot. They were the fiercest of rivals through three successive grand finals. Yet through the image that has immortalized them, they have become lifelong friends. This is their story and their sometimes provocative reflections on what has happened to Rugby League since.
