The Herds have been known for a lot of things, and none of them is anything good. Still, society and the legal system always let them walk away with everything they do.

While the law plays blind and dumb to their crimes, Ford, the only officer who seemed to have had enough of the army of thieves, won't give up until he made sure they couldn't hurt anyone again. He found a perfect chance when O'Neil, the fraternity leader, is seen by two homeless teenagers, Tara and Josh, killing two different people at different times. Even with his full pack of wolves, he couldn't find the teenagers to eliminate his threats. The ring leader didn't know that there was someone else watching and waiting for the perfect time to bring him down.

A vigilante must team up with the law to either make the ring leader rot in jail or silence him forever. But they must first save the teenagers and at the same time use the teenagers as the baits to lure O'Neil to where he would meet his waterloo. If all things go right for the Watcher and the officer, the days of the Herds would soon become once upon a time, but if things go south, it would be the ring leader who wins at the end of the day.
