One of the most iconic aspects of the Arthurian legend is the formation of the Knights of the Round Table. These noble knights, chosen by Arthur himself, represent the epitome of virtue and knighthood. They undertake quests, fight battles, and uphold the code of chivalry.

Among the most famous knights was Sir Lancelot, whose undying love for Queen Guinevere is a central conflict in the Arthurian tales. Lancelot's loyalty to Arthur is tested by his affair with Guinevere, leading to the eventual downfall of the Round Table.

Other notable knights include Sir Gawain, Sir Percival, and Sir Galahad, each with their own unique traits and destinies. Together, they bring depth and richness to the legend, creating a tapestry of heroic adventures.

The Quest for the Holy Grail

King Vortigern the usurper sat upon his throne in London, when, suddenly, upon a certain day, ran in a breathless messenger, and cried aloud—

“Arise, Lord King, for the enemy is come; even Ambrosius and Uther, upon whose throne thou sittest—and full twenty thousand with them—and they have sworn by a great oath, Lord, to slay thee, ere this year be done; and even now they march towards thee as the north wind of winter for bitterness and haste.”

At those words Vortigern’s face grew white as ashes, and, rising in confusion and disorder, he sent for all the best artificers and craftsmen and mechanics, and commanded them vehemently to go and build him straightway in the furthest west of his lands a great and strong castle, where he might fly for refuge and escape the vengeance of his master's sons—"and, moreover," cried he, "let the work be done within a hundred days from now, or I will surely spare no life amongst you all."
