Born in the parish of Whitchurch in Shropshire, he seemingly enlisted into the 38th Regiment of Foot at the age of 24 on 3rd March 1775, in time to see action at the Battle of Bunker Hill in the American War for Independence. He subsequently served in the 27th and 3rd Regiments of Foot before finally transferring to the 8th Royal Veteran Battalion. His certificate shows for each regiment when he enlisted, the time he served as private, corporal and sergeant, and how long he spent in the East or West Indies. At discharge he was considered "worn out" and unfit for service. He was described as "about 57 years of age, 5 feet 6¾ inches in height, light brown hair, grey eyes, fresh complexion, and by trade a silver plater."

It seemed that he must have been remarkably lucky or resourceful or both to have survived over 30 years of service in such troubled times. As a soldier in the 38th, the odds were stacked against him surviving Bunker Hill. His later service spanned the French Revolutionary and Napoleonic Wars and including several years in the West Indies where the British army suffered crippling losses from disease – over 14,000 troops died in less than 4 years.

A closer examination of regimental musters showed his record in a slightly different light. Some of his certificate was accurate but some must have been the product of poor regimental record keeping augmented perhaps by stories drawn from his service in recruiting companies.
