Behind the Scenes

As a theater employee, you become part of a close-knit community. From the moment you step into the historic building, the energy and camaraderie engulf you. Backstage, you are surrounded by a whirlwind of activity. The smell of fresh paint and sawdust fills the air as set designers and carpenters bring their imaginative visions to life.

Stagehands scurry around, adjusting lighting fixtures and ensuring props are in their rightful places. Costumers meticulously sew on sequins and beads to create dazzling outfits that transport the actors and audience alike to a different time and place.

The Stars That Graced the Playhouse

One of the most exciting aspects of working at the Bucks County Playhouse during the 1970s was the opportunity to interact and collaborate with extraordinary talent. Actors and actresses, some already established and others just starting their journey to stardom, graced the stage and filled the building with their passion and dedication to their craft.

Names like Robert Redford, Jessica Tandy, and Helen Hayes became familiar faces at the Playhouse. Their presence infused the theater with a sense of magic and awe. Witnessing their performances and seeing firsthand their incredible talent was a privilege reserved for those lucky enough to work behind the scenes.

Creating Unforgettable Memories

Working at the Playhouse was more than just a job; it was an experience that would shape the rest of your life. The long hours and the tireless dedication poured into every performance created a bond among the staff that transcended the stage.

During breaks, you would gather under the historic walls, sharing laughs and stories that would become the stuff of legend. Each season brought new adventures, from surviving unexpected mishaps on opening night to celebrating the roaring success of a show that left audiences begging for more.

A Magical Era Longing to Be Remembered

The 1970s at the Bucks County Playhouse was more than just a time; it was a state of mind. Every night, the theater came alive with laughter, tears, and applause. It was a sanctuary for dreamers and romantics, a microcosm where reality blended seamlessly with fiction.

As we look back on those incredible years, we can't help but feel a sense of longing. Working at the Playhouse in the 1970s was a privilege that shaped the lives of so many individuals fortunate enough to be part of it. Let's cherish the memories and keep their spirit alive in the whispers of the theater's walls.

Star Daze: Working at the Bucks County Playhouse in the 1970s is a series of memory sketches drawn from the experiences of a parking lot attendant and wannabe writer with famous actors and actresses at the Bucks County Playhouse in New Hope, Pennsylvania. It takes place in the wild times of the early 1970s, when love was free and anything could and did happen. With the star system in place at the playhouse, a succession of luminaries from Hollywood, Broadway and television trekked to New Hope to perform and fall into experiences with the bumbling wannabe writer and parking lot attendant, who bemusedly recounts these peeks behind the curtain. Some of the stories are humorous, some sad, and others ironic. Viewed with the eyes of an insider who should have been left on the outside, the memory sketches include encounters with such stars as John Carradine, Tony Danza, Yvonne de Carlo, Tom Poston and others. It's a theatrical memoir from someone on the fringes of that world who happily stumbles into his encounters with the stars and lives to tell about them many years later.
